Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Mammals of Pennsylvania and New Jersey: A Biographic, Historic and Descriptive Account of the Furred Animals of Land and Sea, Both Living and Extent, Known to Have Existed in These States; Designed as Both a Popular and Scientific Presentation of a Branch of Nature-Study Hitherto Unduly Neglect Job, the ancient divine and naturalist, asks, Who teacheth us more than the beasts of the earth or maketh us wiser than the fowls of heaven? Owing to the difficulty of making acquaintance with those beasts of the earth which we call Mammals, because of their nocturnal, subterranean or aquatic habits, the study of mammalogy has never been as popular as that of the fowls of heaven. It is, however, no less an interesting and profitable study and even yet furnishes the investigator, in spite of the great activity of the past decade in that branch, a far richer field for original zoological study than does ornithology. To man, himself a mammal, the importance of this study, especially as regards his physical, mental and spiritual relationships to the beasts of the earth, cannot, perhaps, be overestimated. One of the most noticeable developments in biological research at the present day is along the line of geographic distribution. It has resulted in the solution of many vexed problems which the last century biologist vainly pondered. In the prosecution of this line of research much is discovered of an incidental character relating to the life-history of created things which has hitherto been hidden away. These are some of the facts which induced me, eleven years ago, to begin the work which forms the subject of this paper. In these studies...
