Tu., Th., Sa., 9:00. 1915-16. Professor Maclennan. A careful detail study of the historical systems of philosophy will be made. Especial emphasis will be laid upon the ancient and modern periods and upon the contributions of the philosophies of these periods to modern philosophy and to contemporary thought respectively. Throughout the course emphasis will be laid upon the relation of the problems, tendencies, and systems of philosophy to the civilizations and social conditions out of which they arise. Considerable attention will be paid to current philosophical problems and tendencies. Lectures and discussions. References to the standard histories of philosophy and to original sources. Note.--Students electing General History of Philosophy should not choose Philosophy 5 or 6 as their required study in Philosophy. 17,18. Masterpieces of Modern Philosophy. Three hours. First and Second Semesters. Tu., Th., Sa., 8:00. Professor Maclennan. A careful study will be made of selections from certain of the great masterpieces of modern philosophy. These studies will be introduced by a survey of the general spirit of modern philosophy and will terminate in a study of one or more of the significant writers of today. The aim of the course is to bring the student into contact with present-day philosophical problems through a study of modern idealism and of contemporary pragmatic and neo-realistic tendencies. Lectures and discussions. Texts: Royce, Spirit of Modern Philosophy; Selections from Locke, Berkeley, Hume, Kant, Hegel, Schopenhaur; James, Beginnings of an Introduction to Philosophy; Perry...
