

U.S. Military Aircraft for Sale: Crafting an F-22 Export Policy

By Matthew H. Molloy

Biblioscholar Okt 2012, 2012. Taschenbuch. Book Condition: Neu. 246x189x6 mm. This item is printed on demand - Print on Demand Neuware - America has a long tradition of cooperation through military assistance with other nations that share common values and defense interests. Arms transfers are an important element of this cooperation. Moreover, the United States has found arms transfers, especially military fighter aircraft, a valuable instrument of foreign and domestic policy. Soon, the U.S. Air Force will receive the world's most advanced and capable fighter, the F-22. Undoubtedly, an aircraft such as this will be attractive to foreign purchasers. The purpose of this paper is twofold. First, it offers a general framework for junior and senior decision makers to use as a touchstone when considering the transfer of advanced air technologies. Second, it specifically addresses the exportability issues associated with the F-22-which other countries have already begun to express interest in acquiring. With this in mind, the paper specifically focuses on whether or not the U.S. should consider risking the potential for migration of critical technologies such as stealth by exporting the F-22. If the aircraft is to be exported, the study further investigates who might be an eligible buyer...
