In this act the University acquires two things; one, a valuable addition to its material possessions and facilities for its work, the other, an added measure of responsibility; and it is my wish to say a few words on both of these subjects. The material acquisition is a large extension to the formerly existing hospital building, and a distinct step towards the completion of the original plan, which contemplated a full use of the plot of ground given to us by the city for hospital purposes. Since the first section of our buildings was erected, there have been numerous improvements in methods and materials of construction, a clearer conception of the best plans for hospital uses, and somewhat of a change in architectural sentiment; and these are all exemplified in the building in which we are now gathered. No expense has been spared in...
